

Mid-Season (+2 games) Playoff Predictions

NFC

All hail the once scandal ridden Nittany Lions who are undefeated through ten games and have a strong possibility of winning out. I whiffed on my pre-season prognostication for a Penn State team that is riding roughshod over a weak conference and has to be considered the presumptive favorite to make it to the Big Game. Their biggest challenge will be from a talented but under-achieving Atlanta team. Lakeland should win their division leaving Warrington and Bensalem as probable wildcards.

AFC

For yet another year, the AFC is dominant, having seven teams with winning records at the ten week mark as opposed to just four in the NFC. The AFC also has a 2-1 advantage thus far in head to head matchups between the conferences. The big brawl in the AFC should see Rolling Green and Salem winning their divisions with seven other teams battling for the three remaining playoff spots.

Ranking the Possible AFC Playoff Teams

Alabama (I underestimated this team in my pre-season predictions)

Cleveland

New York

Waunakee

Las Vegas

Inverness

Vancouver

Note that all four teams in the AFC West Division, the first four teams in the list above, are all still in the mix. It is possible that three of those teams will make it into the post-season making it the toughest division in the KRFL this year.

Good luck to everybody the next few weeks in yet another great KRFL year.
